

Struggling visibly with tough choices

We will not always know the answers to life's ethical questions. Doing the right thing isn't always the easy thing – and it is okay to struggle with the tough choices.

As hard as we try to get it right, we'll all eventually make a wrong choice. No one will be "Six Pillar perfect" – so just vow to do better next time.

But as you allow yourself to rebound from bad choices, remember that we owe that same forgiveness to others. Next time we're tempted to judge another person's decisions, maybe we need pause to remember that just like ourselves, everyone else is just trying to get it right too.