

Who pays for your choices?

Imagine Kate, a smart 15-year-old, who enjoys spending time with her family and friends. She lives at home with her parents and two brothers. One night, Kate got a call from her boyfriend. He asked her to sneak out to meet him. Kate agreed. When her boyfriend picked Kate up, she smelled alcohol on his breath.

Have you ever known something you wish you didn't?

Have we forgotten how to respectfully disagree?

Recently it seems as though disagreeing with someone justifies exposing them to criticism, harsh language and overall disrespect. Have we forgotten how to respectfully disagree?
